COUNTERFEIT COINS FLOOD ALEXANDRIA

Merchants Find Many Small Silver and Nickel Pieces Which Are Spurious—Boys Who Looted Church Are Punished.

WASHINGTON TIMES BUREAU, ALEXANDRIA, VA., AUG. 18.

Merchants of Alexandria are somewhat agitated over the appearance of spurious coins of minor denomination, which are said to have been freely circulated within the last few weeks.

No formal complaint of the matter has yet been lodged, but it is underthat several merchants have found quarters, dimes and nickels in According to the annual financial replainly counterfeit. The coins, it is said, are clever imitations, but are easily detected by their weight, which is perceptibly lighter than the Governorm of the school board, the receipts during the past year were $24.705.71, the disbursements during the same period being $24.608.71, leaving a balance of cash on hand of $97. ment's money, and which fall to "ring" when dropped on stone or metal. The lads were arrested by Officer J. C. Gill, upon information furnished by a junk dealer, who reported that the boys had attempted to dispose of about fifty feet of copper spouting.

When questioned the boys claimed that they had found it in the rear of a house on Prince street, but later confessed that they had stripped it from

As the days of Mayor F. J. Paff's administration are drawing to a close, he is making every effort to collect the license fees from merchants. Several delinquents are causing considerable trouble, and it seems possible that they may be arraigned in police court and be charged with conducting a business without a license, which makes them subject to a fine.

The Alexandria Trades Council is arranging for a monster Labor Day celebration at Luna Park. Among the speakers already selected are Richard E. Byrd, member of the Virginia State Legislature; John J. Colpoys, and J. P. Conlin, of Washington.

DR. HANSMANN DIES; WAS WELL KNOWN AS SPIRITUALIST

Once Prominent Physician Various Causes Killed Over in City Passes Away at Daughter's Home.

Dr. Theodore Hansmann, for many ears known as one of the leading physicians of the city, and recently prominent because of his interest in spiritualistic affairs, died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ella Woodbury, 1722 Willard street. He had been feeble for some time, but it was thought that he would linger for several months, and his death was unexpected,

No funeral arrangements will be determined until word can be received making repairs to the mains when leaks from the doctor's son, Max Hansmann, of this city, who is in the Adirondacks on a camping party, and is twenty-five miles from a railroad. The funeral will probably not be held until Thursday.

Attended President Lincoln. Dr. Hansmann was born in Germany n 1821, and came to this country in 1853. He was considered one of the most brilliant physicians of his day, and was the regular attendant of President Lincoln, Carl Schurz, and other noted figures of the National Capital. He retired from the practice of medicine several years ago and became interested in the spirit world, publishing several articles on the subject in 1907 and later years. He claimed that he had it not been for the late spring and the perfectly clear visions of his "spirit friends," and that the clearness of the portraits were those of strong spirits. capable of manifesting themselves in fleshy forms. "The blurred ones," he said, "are those who died without understanding spiritualism.

Among those he thought he communicated with were President Lincoln, President Grant, who was one of his most frequent visitors in the spirit, Queen Louise of Prussia, Balzac, Carl schurz, and other. Only a few days ago he received a communication from General Grant advised him to hurry up and to remember that death is only a resting place. Dr. Hansmann believed that spiritualism will revolutionize the world, do away with strife and make the earth a better place to live on. He is survived by two sons, Max Hansmann, chief of a division in the light house service, and Albert E. T. Hansmann, a local patent lawyer, and two daughters, Mrs. Ella Woodbury, with whom he lived in his later years, and Miss Louise Hansmann. His wife, for-merly a Miss Ronnegar, of Philadelphia, died many years ago.

GOOD' PRODUCTION AT THE COLUMBIA

Carefully Interpreted by Players.

The stilted phraseology and the throbbing romance of a period which has long since become merely a memory were revived at the F street playhouse last night, when the Columbia Players gave Charles Klein's and J. I. Clarke's play, "Heartsease." Although the plot is one which invariably receives instant sympathy and understanding from the audience, the struggles of a genius for recognition and a fame that would enable him to reach his heart's desire, it takes some little time for the speeches to seem natural and the full purport of the exaggerated courtesy discerned. The role of Eric Temple offers an unlimited field for the display of the actor's emotional and dramatic art, and Mr. Robins proved himself entirely capable of handling all the requirements of the part. In the second act, when his opera is stolen from him by his rival, Sir Geoffrey Pomfret, played by Godfrey Matthews, Mr. Robins gives a splendid reading of his lines, which paves the way for his success in the next act.

A not overcrowded, but insistent, house demanded repeated curtain calls after the scene with Sir Geoffrey in the fourth act, where not only the hero, but that gentleman and the rest of the company gave a strong and most thrilling scene. There is no denying the fact that the remainder of the cast gave by no manner of means the finished and splendid work that did Mr. Robins, but their efforts of the exaggerated courtesy discerned.

means the finished and splendid work that did Mr. Robins, but their efforts were highly satisfactory in the main. So, excellent a Sir Geoffrey, the villain, did Godfrey Matthews make that several little sounds, suspiciously like cheers or hisses, emanated from the audience when Eric Temple made his denouncement of Pomfret in the third act. What more could a villain wish? While a trifle too emphatic, John Cline, nevertheless, relieved himself of any number of eighteenth century oaths with surprising ease.

Stanley James, as Padbury, the most ordinary merchant, who had "such a

Miss Frances Neilson, as Margaret Neville, daughter of Lord Neville, and the object of Temple's love, is lovely in her brocaded silks and flowered finery. The role is not exacting, but Miss Neilson gives it a pathos and aprest which serves as an excellent contrast for the more worldly action of the play. Miss Laura Oakman, Miss Marie Drofnah, and Miss Carrie Thatcher are distinctly adequate and fit more pleasantly into their minor parts than some of the their minor parts than some of the masculine members of the cast. Pleasing Program At Cosmos Theater

A model of a tabloid playlet, with some pathos and full of the laughmaking element, is "A Day at Ellis Island," which is being presented at the Cosmos Theater this week by Maurice Samuels and his company of five players, one of them an unusually good violinist. It tells the story of the effort of a modest Italian who has accumulated a fortune to get his wife and his only daughter into this country. Samuels, as the Italian, is thoroughly at home in his role.

Another offering are the pictures made by Lieutenant Eidridge, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, with col-ored sand, such as is used by Japanese street entertainers. The work is artistically performed.

Other acts include Al Wild, fat and funny, in an offering of song and imitations; the Zarelli-Marsh Frio, genune comedians as well as skillful ath ine comedians as well as skiliful athletes, in an offering that is applauded as much for its laughmaking qualities as for its acrobatic feats; Kollins and Clifton, good banjoists in pleasing selections, and Benny Franklin and Tots in a dainty sketch especially attractive to women and children. A little comedian three years old is featured. The Paine

Safest Antiseptic For Women to Use
